

OPINIONS

Terrorism isn't war

RE: your editorial, "An act of war" (Examiner View, Sept. 11), I would like to suggest otherwise, and point out that this is extreme terrorism, not war. Any attempt to turn it into a nation vs. nation conflict would mean killing innocents and committing more atrocities.

The call of war feeds the primitive thirst for revenge, which, in the long run, not only hinders the solution, but also creates new problems. By declaring "war," we are creating more enemies at a time when we need allies, and spawning more hatred, which is in effect playing into the hands of America bashers, and making conditions ripe for more attacks on the United States.

Chris Wen-Chao Li

Assistant Professor of Foreign Languages

S.F. State University

The City

The San Francisco Examiner / Tuesday September 18, 2001

<http://www.examiner.com/opinion/default.jsp?story=OPletters.0918w>